Introduction

Holiday season is just around the corner.

There will be parties, celebrations, food and champagne. Ahhhh....that irresistible succulent Christmas turkey and sumptuous pudding. That delicious new year buffet and the traditional countdown champagne are so tempting.

Your spirit is willing but your flesh is weak. You binge, I binge...We all binge! These treats can be really special when shared with close friends and family so enjoy and be skillful.

So what is the price you pay for your holiday binge? Well, normally after the holiday period you step onto the bathroom scale and horror of horrors, you have gained a few pounds!!

Or more than a few pounds...

The dreaded HWGS is upon us. What's HWGS you ask? You may know it as the very sneaky Holiday Weight Gain Syndrome.

Holiday Weight Gain Syndrome usually starts its attack around Halloween and works its black magic all the way through the New Year.

Before you know it, you've lost some muscle, added five or ten (or fifteen) pounds of fat and don't feel so great starting off the new year.

But there is good news. Holiday Weight Gain Syndrome is preventable. You don't need to succumb to its temptations. In fact, you can even improve your body over the holidays and slap HWGS upside the head.

You just have to follow the right holiday program involving weight training, cardio, nutrition and proper supplementation.

Are you ready? Let's dive into some holiday eating guidelines that should be set in stone and adhered to. For by following these simple guidelines you will discover the sweet spot of holiday enjoyment and while maintaining your body and your figure.

Chapter 1 – Guidelines (Great Easy Tips) To Follow For A Successful Holiday Period With ZERO Weight Gain

In this first section of the guide I would like to share with you a few guidelines that have helped me in the past to stay on track and not put on any excess weight between now and the end of the year. Some are just common sense (like... eat something before you go to the feast so you are not ravengingly hungry and eat all of the chips and dip before the dinner even starts!) and some you might not have realised.

1) The Holiday Season Is Just A Few Days.

Keep everything in perspective. Although it is a time of festivities it is only for a very short period of time. Don't let the binge turn into a week or more by taking home all the leftovers or storing more sweets and pastries than you need for that particular holiday. It is usually what people find in the fridge and on the kitchen shelf after the holiday that they continue to binge. Empty the fridge and the shelves. This will definitely help you not to put on any weight during the holiday period.

When pressured to take home some goodies, choose the proteins and not the carbohydrates. I don't know about you but I love turkey sandwiches (with real mayo!) Use the thin pita style bread to limit the carbs or eat the sandwich open faced.

2) Turn Your TV Set Off.

Instead of watching all those holiday special programs on your goggle box, get moving! Instead of watching a soccer game (football) on TV, get a ball and go to the nearest park for a session of kicking (or throwing) the ball around. Instead of lying on your couch snacking on a packet of chips, go lie by the poolside, then do a few laps. Better still, get your family and friends to join you. Go for a jog instead. If it is winter where you live, be innovative, think of some indoor activities or exercises you can do. While others gain weight, you may even lose weight. After all it's a holiday. Have fun!

3) Steer Clear Of Excess Alcohol To Avoid Weight Gain

One gram of alcohol packs a massive 7 calories. In contrast, carbs and protein have only 4 calories per gram. Calories from alcohol are just, well, calories with zero nutritional value.

They will rapidly convert into fat fast when you do not burn them off quickly. Avoid high-calorie mixed drinks like cocktails that are full of sugar or beer which are high in carbohydrates which translate into even more calories.

4) Drink Plenty Of Water

Juices, soft drinks and coffee don't count as drinking water! Just good ole plain water. Water flushes out toxins in the body, lubricates your joints, moistens your eyes, keeps your blood thinner and helps the body recover from dehydration caused by alcohol consumption.

→ Secret Special Tip: You will also feel fuller so that you will not over-eat and then resulting in gaining weight.

5) Skip Dessert To Stop Consuming Empty Calories

Do you need those sweet and calorie laden thingies? Especially after the feast which we normally have just consumed. I bet squeezing in that piece of cake or slice of pie to an already satisfied tummy is not going to help us really satisfy our body and maintain our figure.

If you must have them, choose those that are not that sweet or even better, just have some fibrous fruits and nuts. Do this to keep your weight in check but also enjoy some variety.

6) Make Sure You Eat Before You Go To Any Holiday Gathering.

You know you will be tempted by all sorts of unhealthy but yummy foods. Make sure you eat something that is good for you before you go. Try to make sure you are not hungry when you arrive, or you will be much more tempted to overeat as well, especially carbs.

Choose protein and good fats for your pre-dinner/feast snack to keep your appetite and blood sugar in check: Nuts and seeds, quality cheese, chicken, jerky, avocado and greek yoghurt are some excellent choices.

7) Drink some water before you go and alternate higher calorie drinks like alcoholic beverages, eggnog or hot chocolate with water while you are at the holiday party.

Drinks can have a lot of hidden calories in them, so watch out. Diet sodas are not a good option as artificial sweeteners encourage insulin production and blood sugar imbalances...

By the way, insulin is a fat storage hormone. This means as you increase your insulin response you increase the likelihood of storing more of your food as fat. Keep your blood sugar even and that helps reduce your fat storage, especially around the stomach and hips.

8) Fill Your Plate With Some “Good” Foods First.

Pick some raw vegetables, but go easy on the dip. Turkey breast, and lean ham or pork roast are other good choices. Don't forget a nice plate of salad with a 'no sugar' salad dressing and some fresh fruit for dessert.

9) Don't Cut Your Favorite Holiday Treats Completely Out.

If you don't allow yourself the occasional small indulgence, you will be much more likely to break down and binge on all those cookies and treats.

The key is to enjoy small portions or bites of your favourite foods. If you have a soft side for chocolate chip cookies then go ahead and indulge, but limit yourself to one a day or every few days. Of course the same applies if you prefer cheesecake or gingerbread men. Me? I go for chewy peanut butter or molasses cookies!

➔ Secret Special Tip: Take a small bite and really savor it. Let the taste sensations fill your mouth and awareness. Let it linger. Done properly it reduces your desire for more and gives you a wonderful experience. Now.

Eat several small meals a day. This old tip holds especially true during the holiday season. We tend to skip meals and indulge in one large holiday dinner with the entire family. Don't starve yourself all day. Get some healthy (non carb) snacks in and most importantly start your day with a good, healthy breakfast. You will be able to enjoy your holiday more by stabilizing your blood sugar. You don't want to spend the day being grumpy from not eating for hours, or be the first ready for a nap after overeating.

10) Use The Busy Shopping Season And Burn Some Extra Calories.

If you are heading to the mall, park a little further away, or take your time and do a round of window shopping all through the mall before you buy. Every few extra steps that you take count. Just don't reward yourself afterwards with food. For extra motivation to get more walking in, consider wearing a pedometer.

See:

<http://www.fitnessmagazine.com/workout/cardio/walking/walk-off-the-weight/> for more information on walking and complementary movements.

11) Take Some Time To Relax.

The holidays can be a very stressful season if we let them.

Many of us tend to overeat or medicate ourselves with food when we are stressed. Work in some extra time just for you. Sit in front of the fire with a good book or your favorite magazine, lift some weights (for fun!), go get your nails done, take a bath or go for a walk. Do whatever works for you to calm you down and help you distress. You could even enjoy some time for prayer or meditation.

Above all, enjoy the holidays and remember they are not only about food, but more importantly about family spending quality time together. Treat yourself to some new holiday candles, listen to your favorite Christmas tunes, or go for a drive through a lit up neighborhood this year. Volunteer or give gifts anonymously. This spikes your brain's pleasure chemicals. Have fun during this special time of the year.

Chapter 2 – Boosting Your Metabolism

A major key to eliminating the usual Holiday Weight Gain is boosting your metabolism so you're burning more calories every day. This is the major theme of our Harnessing the holiday weight gain guide.

A properly designed training program will help keep your metabolism revving along. On top of that, the right training will increase your body's natural growth hormone, which incinerates body fat like a blow torch! Well, almost! ;-)

And we'll design it so you don't have to get to the gym (unless you want to!) and you don't have to spend an hour and a half a day working out.

After all, the holiday season is a BUSY one! Who has time for that? We have lives, people!

The great news is that you really can increase your own levels of growth hormone naturally, without drugs, by manipulating certain variables such as your nutrition (not just what, but when you eat), your sleep, and even by exercising a specific way.

You see, growth hormone levels are directly affected by things like: stress, sleep, age, food, body mass and exercise. Age is the only one on that list that you can't manipulate (maybe someday, though!).

The secretion of growth hormone (GH) can be negatively affected by a poor diet, too little sleep, continuously high stress levels, etc. Low levels of GH has real consequences, such as high body fat levels, poor health, stunted growth, decreased endurance, foggy mind, decreased will, impaired metabolism and accelerated aging!

Understanding and regulating your sleeping and eating cycles, as well as specific exercise protocols, have been shown to significantly increase GH actions.

Growth hormone's main functions include anabolic effects on muscle, stimulating bone growth and lipolysis (using fat for energy!). This is where High Intensity Interval Training comes in (more on that later).

But first, in the next chapter let's look at some simple nutrition strategies you can use during the holiday season.

Chapter 3 – Simple Nutrition Strategies For The Holidays

Eat More Protein To Burn Fat:

Protein isn't just for building muscle. It's for burning fat, too. A good way to keep the holiday weight gain at bay is to greatly increase your protein intake over the holiday season. While protein helps build and preserve muscle, it also helps to control your appetite as well as boost your metabolism.

Eating more protein to burn fat was confirmed in a study published in the American Journal of Physiology. One group was fed a high protein diet (just over one gram per pound of bodyweight per day) while the second group consumed a protein diet near equal to that of the RDA.

The group eating the high protein diet burned more fat than the group consuming protein near equal to the RDA.

One reason for the ability of protein to burn fat could be an increased "thermic" effect. The thermic effect of the RDA group was elevated 16% after eating.

However, in the high protein group the thermic effect increased a lot after eating, almost 3-times that of the RDA group.

This thermic effect of digesting your food peaks approximately one hour after eating.

By adding more protein to each meal, you increase your metabolism, which is the basic theme of this guide. Your body requires more energy (i.e. calories) to process protein than it does carbohydrates.

So go ahead and indulge a little in those high protein holiday foods such as the deviled eggs, shrimp cocktails and of course the holiday turkey!

Let's look at some of the food sources you should focus on:

High Protein Foods:

- * Whey protein
- * Eggs (Deviled during the holiday season)
- * Egg whites
- * Chicken breasts
- * Turkey breasts
- * Lean beef
- * Fish (tuna, salmon, shrimp cocktail)
- * Protein bars
- * Egg protein powder
- * Casein (cottage cheese)
- * Greek Yoghurt

* Almonds

* Chia Seeds

*Jerky

High Carbohydrate Food(Caution):

* Potatoes

* Sweet potatoes, yams

* Oatmeal, cream of wheat, cream of rice

* Rice

* Rice Cakes

* Carrots

* Bread

* Pasta

- * Cakes, Muffins, Rolls
- * French Fries
- * Ice Cream, Sherbert, Gelato

Low Carbohydrate:

- * Any green leafy vegetable
- * Beans and Peas
- * Fresh Sprouts

Healthy Fats:

- * Coconut Oil
- * Olive oil
- * Sunflower oil (in small quantities)

- * Safflower oil (in small quantities)

- * Flaxseed oil

- * Walnuts

- * Avocados

- * Almonds

- * Pecans

- * Brazil Nuts

- * Hazel Nuts

Holiday Table Strategies

When planning strategies to keep your diet intact throughout the holidays, there are two main fronts you need to wage on the Battle of the Bulge. First, you need to work on diet strategies for events that you host and second, strategies for events that you do not host.

Hosting holiday events can be a lot of work, but it does give you a tremendous advantage in terms of managing your diet. Many people are reluctant to even attempt incorporating their diet plans into the foods they offer at holiday get-togethers because they are concerned they will offend their family and friends.

First, not everything that you offer on your holiday buffet table needs to be diet related.

Just make sure you have enough of the items that fit into your plan so that you have plenty to choose from without straying into forbidden territory. Also, consider ways that you can make traditional foods diet friendly. In many cases, your guests and family will never even know the difference; unless you tell them.

Cocktail parties are always a big hit and it's easy to incorporate diet friendly foods into such a party with low calorie dipping sauces, lean meat skewers, fresh vegetables and fruits.

Now secondly, You will have less control over events that you are not hosting; but that doesn't mean that you have no options.

One of the best ways to defend yourself against the onslaught on tempting foods at most holiday parties is to eat a sensible small meal before you attend the party. This will take a significant edge off your appetite and you will be less likely to cheat when you arrive.

Another strategy that can work well is to bring a dish that fits in with your diet plan. Don't make a big deal out of it or force it on anyone else and you'll likely find that no one is really paying much attention to the fact that you brought your own food. Also, be sure to drink plenty of water; which can be a great tool to help you feel full.

Finally, don't forget to incorporate the help of a weight loss buddy to get you through any moments of temptations. Chances are, there will be at least one other person in attendance who is also trying to stick to their guns in terms of diet resolutions. Support one another by staying away from the food table and taking a brisk walk after the event to work off anything you just couldn't resist sampling.

Fasting

Another strategy for combating weight gain that you can look into is including some intermittent fasting during the holiday season for serious fat melting. This can be a great option, if you are up for it.

There are a lot of variations of intermittent fasting which can get quite technical. However, It's the holiday season, you're already extremely busy. So keep things simple.

Use intermittent fasting on the days you know you have parties or dinners to go to in the evening, whether it's office parties or a holiday party at a friends.

On those days, don't eat until just before the party! (High quality protein and good oil). Yes, this can be tough, but it will really help you keep the fat off during the holiday season.

Of course, be smart about it. If you are one of those crazy social people that has five party days in a row, you probably don't want to do this. But if you have one or two, it will work just fine.

Another version, which is easier for most people to follow, is described in many books or articles as the 16:8 plan. You basically eat in an 8 hour window and fast the other 16 hours. The good news is, about half of those fasting hours are when you are sleeping!

Basically, you just fast until lunch time if you can't handle an all day fast, and you stop eating around 8 PM.. This will still help!

A great way to remember is:

- Eat Between 12 PM and 8 PM
- Don't Eat Between 8 PM and 12 PM the Next Day

The really good news about intermittent fasting is that we are all so busy during the holidays, many of us struggle to get in regular meals anyway! Now, we are just doing so in structured way so we can maximize fat burning!

Chapter 4 - Melting Holiday Fat With High Intensity Interval Training

Like I said earlier in this holiday guide, you won't need to increase your training time and spend hours in the gym. But you will need to ramp up your training intensity.

Increasing Intensity:

This means a program that includes the following:

Shorter rest periods between sets (10 seconds to a minute, tops!). Don't rush the performance of the exercise itself but you want to limit your rest period between sets and exercises.

Include intensity techniques such as supersets, circuits and complexes. These all help to boost the intensity of the exercises, release more growth hormone, boost your metabolism and keep your rest periods short.

Keep in mind, the routines given are flexible. This is NOT a 'do this workout "A" on Monday, do this workout "B" one Tuesday' style program that progressively builds over a few weeks as most good programs do.

These are specifically created Micro-Burst workouts designed to use minimal equipment (such as a kettlebell or a couple of dumbbells) or no equipment at all, so that you can get in workouts anywhere, anytime during the busy holiday season.

We want you to keep working out a habit. Too many people drop their workouts during the holiday season and then never get back to them and before you know it, it's coming up on beach season and they haven't worked out since October.

These workouts are not designed specifically to build strength or a lot of muscle (although they can when done correctly). They are designed to burn calories and boost your metabolism while you're resting so you can keep that ugly holiday season flab from creeping up on you and hanging out permanently (over your belt!).

You can even mix and match. For example, if you do get to the gym for a full workout that utilizes more strength training, go for it. Then take one of the Micro workouts and do just one round at the end of your regular workout. One round (or circuit) of these workouts will only take you about 4 to 10 minutes.

Benefits Of These HIIT Workouts:

Now, what's so special about these workouts? A few things, really. It makes sure you increase the intensity of your workout, which is a key to muscle growth. By cramming more work into a shorter amount of time your intensity increases greatly over what you were doing previously.

By shortening the workout so much, you are more likely to go all out on each set because you won't be pacing yourself for a silly two hour workout.

If you've been doing a routine with a decent amount of volume and numerous workouts per week, this will be quite a change and your intensity levels will skyrocket, spurring your body into a higher muscle building, fat burning zone.

On the fat burning side, this routine will elevate your heart rate, giving you a good cardio workout. Believe me, if you do the typical cardio routine of most gym goers, this program will be more of a cardio workout than you are used to.

You'll also crank up your body's growth hormone release as well, causing your body to burn even more fats.

You will burn more calories during the actual routine. Your body's metabolism will stay elevated long after the workout, burning more calories at rest, and helping to melt the body fat away.

Numerous studies have shown that high intensity training (both weight training and high intensity interval cardio training) can keep your metabolism elevated for up to 39 hours after your workout is over.

In other words, train intensely enough, and you'll be burning fat while doing nothing. Not a bad deal, for a brief period of working hard.

And the workout will keep your lean muscle (it will even build muscle when done appropriately), burn fat, and rev your metabolism to much higher levels, throwing you headfirst toward the body you want.

As you can see, with the right type of workout, you can boost your metabolism and burn a lot of calories, even when you aren't working out.

When muscles suffer micro trauma (the muscle tears caused by intense resistance training) the body utilizes energy, specifically stored body fat, in the recovery process.

This means that your metabolism stays elevated over the next 24 to 48 hours as your body repairs the micro trauma.

Getting Started With HIIT

With high intensity training, if you put into it what you want to get out of it, you'll see some fantastic results as long as your nutrition and supplementation programs are in place.

The sessions are shorter and you burn more calories, both huge advantages over the typical routines.

That being said, nothing comes without a price. And in this case, just as in most anything, that price is hard work. These programs are very demanding.

Unless your current fitness level is pretty high, your initial sessions will be break in routines, designed to get you ready for the real deal.

But don't worry, your performance will improve quickly and dramatically. And you will still get more out of these sessions than you ever got out of those 90 minute (or longer) snooze fests you used to do.

These are workouts and exercises that are based on timed intervals and not reps or weight. This allows you to adjust the routine to your fitness level. If you need to pace yourself on certain exercises you can do so.

You can also regress on certain bodyweight exercises. Let's say you're doing regular push ups for 20 second sets. Halfway through the third set you can't get any more push ups.

You could either take a brief break, then continue or you could continue with the push ups but now do them from your knees. Or do both if you need to, a short rest and continue from the knees.

If you're doing any timed workouts like this involving intervals, I highly recommend you purchase the Gymboss Interval Timer (there's a phone app, too). It's the most versatile interval timer around and it's well worth the investment of about $20. I use it all the time.

If you're serious about working out at home and don't have the space or money for much equipment, I highly recommend you get a few essential pieces of equipment. The good thing is, you can do so over time. You can always add to your home gym.

Start out with some dumbbells and a bench. Grab a jump rope. Resistance bands are awesome and versatile and easy to take with you anywhere you go. I highly recommend getting a pull up bar.

It's very simple to sit in a door frame. No elaborate set up. Really, it takes just seconds to put up and pull down. You can check it out at Amazon.com

That's all you really need. It won't cost you much to start and you can expand your collection as needed.

If you can't afford anything right now, that's fine! Bodyweight only workouts are awesome, fun and effective for shedding fat and getting in great shape, while looking good, too!

Now onto the specific workouts we will be doing to hijack the holiday weight gain!

Chapter 5 – The Tabata System Of HIIT

The Tabata workout system is a version of the High Intensity Interval Training program developed by Professor Izumi Tabata as training for Olympic speedskaters in 1996. The results studies conducted on the training program confirm that even a four minute high intensity cardiovascular exercise routine improves a person's level of fitness.

Through the professional athlete community, the Tabata workout soon became known as “The 4-Minute Miracle” and it opened a whole new world of how professional athletes exercised and kept in shape which is perfect for the busy holiday period.

How Does Tabata Work?

Tabata engages your body’s aerobic and anaerobic systems to do the job. For those of you who don’t know the difference between aerobic and anaerobic, here is a brief explanation of the two:

Aerobic: This is the type of exercise you’re most familiar with for a cardio workout. Aerobic exercises use your cardio respiratory system, i.e., heart, lungs and blood vessels. Aerobic actually translates to “with oxygen” and uses the oxygen for fat and carb burning to produce energy. In an aerobic exercise, you use arms and legs in repetitive movements.

Anaerobic: These exercises target the muscles in your body. Training anaerobically means training without oxygen. Anaerobic exercise is defined as short duration, high intensity exercise which are very short in duration - seconds to 2 minutes. .

When using the Tabata method, you're working out intensely for short bursts and then recovering for a short amount of time as we covered above.

Intensity Levels of Tabata Training

You should have a good idea about your level of fitness before you engage in Tabata exercise. Even though the workouts are short in duration, they'll tax you to your limits, so you should already have a decent level of cardiovascular fitness before you try it.

Four minutes doesn't sound like a long amount of time, but if you're not in shape, your heartrate will soon be getting elevated through the roof. So to gauge your level. Below are explanations of the 3 different fitness levels and respective levels of HIIT

Here's how Tabata training works at all three levels:

Beginner: Choose any exercise you're comfortable with. Many people choose a treadmill. You'll want a timer so that you don't always have to look at the clock. Perform the Tabata workout on a ration of 1:3 (for example 20 seconds of intense sprinting to 60 seconds of walking.)

Intermediate: If you've been going to the gym and are in good shape, you can move into the intermediate level of Tabata training which means that you may be able to maintain a 2:3 or 2:2 ratio. Don't be surprised if it's too difficult and you have to decrease the intensity to a beginner level. Tabata is tough at first, but you can work your way up to intermediate by keeping at it.

Advanced (Athlete) Professional athletes or those who are in top shape may be able to begin Tabata at its original level developed for Olympian speed skaters. This level of interval training is extremely difficult to perform and you may have to decrease the intensity if you find that it's just too much.

A typical Tabata protocol for a beginner would look like the following timetable if you were working out on a treadmill:

- * Warm up to prevent injury by walking briskly for 2 minutes.
- * Run at a sprint as hard as you can for 10 seconds.
- * Walk to recover for 30 seconds.
- * Sprint with intensity for another 20 seconds.
- * Recover for 60 seconds.
- * Repeat 8 times.

* Cool down.

And here is an advanced variation of the tabata workout using 4 bodyweight exercises

* Jumping Jacks

* High knees

* Squats

* Pushups

You'll start by doing jumping jacks as fast as you can for 20 seconds. Then you'll rest for 10 seconds. Then you'll move on to high knees for 20 seconds and rest for 10 seconds. Continue on with squats and pushups in the same manner.

After you've gone through all four exercises you'll repeat the cycle one more time.

Cool Down. Following the 4 minutes of HIIT you'll need to cool down. You can walk or jog anywhere from 5-10 minutes. In Tabata research studies, the cool down was performed for the entire 10 minutes.

You'll also need to stretch, paying attention to the specific muscles you worked throughout the 4 minute session. So all up a full workout with warm up and cool down done in 20minutes!

Chapter 6 – Full Example Day Of Holiday Exercise Routine

Trying to fit in a solid workout in the holidays is easier said than done. But if you normally exercise for 30-45 minutes you could do 3 mini workouts throughout the day instead.

For example, you could do three 4 minute Tabata style workouts throughout the day. So here's how a holiday day will look...

Roll out of bed and run through the warm up.

Workout #1 (Morning)

Follow the 20/10 Tabata protocol of 20 seconds of work followed by 10 seconds of rest.

Alternate a round of jump rope with a round of burpees for 8 total rounds (4 per exercise).

Jump Rope x 20 seconds

Rest 10 seconds

Burpee x 20 seconds

Rest 10 seconds

Complete 8 total rounds

Don't have a jump rope or a place to do it? Fake it! Do the motion without the jump rope! Or, jog in place. Or perform jumping jacks or seal jacks.

Workout #2 (Lunch)

Complete AMRAP (as many rounds as possible) in 4 minutes

- * Reverse Lunge to Knee Strike (5 per side)

- * Skater Hops (4 per side - 8 total)

- * Alternate Forward Jump Lunges (3 per side - 6 total)
 - Spiderman Push Up (2 per side - 4 total)

Workout #3 (Evening)

Follow the 20/10 Tabata protocol of 20 seconds of work followed by 10 seconds of rest.

Alternate a round of body weight squats (do jump squats if this is too easy) with a round of push ups for 8 total rounds (4 per exercise).

This would be:

Bodyweight Squat x 20 seconds

Rest 10 seconds

Push Ups x 20 seconds

Rest 10 seconds

Complete 8 total rounds

If you really want to crush this workout, make it 16 rounds so it's a full Tabata-style (8 rounds x 4 minutes) for each exercise. This is probably a much better option if it's the only workout you are doing that day, not as the third and final workout in the same day!

While it's crucial for your long term health and fitness success to follow a well-designed training program and not just work out, sometimes the ability to get in any type of workout can keep us going.

Hitting random, short, but tough multi-workouts when things are really hectic can be just what we need to keep us from stopping cold turkey

Conclusion

By putting all these things (or at least some!) into play, you can not only avoid the dreaded Holiday Weight Gain Syndrome, you can make improvements in your body over the holidays, leaving you pumped up and motivated for the new year instead of upset because you let yourself backslide over the holidays.

Your workouts will be hard. They'll also be very short so suck it up and crank up the intensity for a successful holiday season!

Good luck for the journey and begin today!
